Defending the Injured Against the Billion-Dollar Insurance Companies

When a serious wreck or work injury happens, most people don't know whom to call or what their rights are. The insurance company might tell the injured victim it doesn't owe them anything or wants them to sign a settlement agreement for a paltry amount.

Our best advice we can offer as attorneys to anyone hurt through no fault of their own: don't sign anything until you speak with a personal injury lawyer.

Insurance companies are interested in profit above all else. Injuries cost them money and their adjusters are trained to do everything they can to reduce claims, which is always at the victim's expense.

Attorney Gary Martin Hays understands how insurance companies work because he began his career defending them. Once he understood their tactics, he switched to defending victims hurt in auto accidents, work accidents, or due to negligent security.

"I've seen what the insurance companies will try to get away with when it comes to taking advantage of people who have been hurt,” Attorney Hays said. “Some of these injured victims were already struggling before their accident. Now they can’t work, they’re getting thousands of dollars of medical bills in the mail, and they may be facing a reduced quality of life.”

With more than 30 years of legal experience battling the insurance company, Attorney Hays and his team know how to get accident victims the full amount of compensation they need.

MORE THAN $1 BILLION RECOVERED

Attorney Hays and his firm serve victims injured or killed due to auto accidents, large truck accidents, work accidents, and inadequate security. To that end, they have successfully negotiated well over $1 billion for their clients.

“We understand all of the legal, emotional, and physical issues that arise in personal injury claims, which means we can help our client’s focus on a complete recovery,” he said.

The road to recovery is often complicated, usually because the insurance company is dragging its heels or trying to throw in bureaucratic curve balls. These tactics can wear down a person’s determination to see their case through to the end, which is why having an experienced attorney in one’s corner is so important.
